She was born in Long Prairie, Minnesota, and she carried that Midwestern warmth throughout her life. She was the proud mother of her son, but her heart was deep enough to hold many more. Linda had a way of adopting others wherever she went, especially friends and soldiers far from home, and making them feel fed, safe, and seen. If you knew her, chances were that you were fed by her at some point, and you left her table better than you arrived. She loved reading, crocheting, and the simple companionship of her cats. However, the kitchen was where she shone. Cooking and baking were her love languages, and no one ever left her home hungry. Linda was a far greater presence than her stature let on, and she possessed an indomitable spirit. Her wit could catch you off guard, and her loyalties ran deep. She didn't need to be loud to be powerful; she simply showed up, again and again.

Linda is survived by her son, Kirk Wimer; her sister, Lila; and her nieces,

Cheyenne and Breanne.
